May 28. The Sims 3: Second Edition area51 project must not be a goal for us. I'm working on my own simple API system with PHP. In PHP 5, I'm getting the super global $_SERVER variable and trying to get the value of the HTTP_HOST header. //get the host header value $host = $_SERVER['HTTP_HOST']; Now, I need to know what class the $host value belongs to. I know that $_SERVER['HTTP_HOST'] is a string that corresponds to the class name. How can I get the class name of $_SERVER['HTTP_HOST']? A: You can use get_class(): get_class($_SERVER['HTTP_HOST']); Or you can use get_class_methods(): get_class_methods(get_class()); Much has been said about how the infrastructure spend of the budget was a bit odd. What you might not know is that while the spend was uncharacteristic of the budget, it's actually an indication of our economic strength. We◆ 82157476af
